

Comparison of Multi-Agent RAG Answers

Slovenian matrimonial-property query: BGE-M3 baseline, Nemotron, and Gemini

1. BGE-M3 Baseline and Nemotron

Both answers reach the same central conclusion: the retrieved material does not establish a free-standing Slovenian remedy expressly called judicial separation of assets. Both identify Article 79 (investment in the other spouse's separate immovable property) and Article 75 (court division where spouses cannot agree) as the supported judicial routes.

The BGE-M3 DeepSeek answer is organised as a conventional legal explanation and repeatedly limits its conclusion to the retrieved evidence. DeepSeek triggered the guardrail once, resulting in one corrective rewrite. The subsequent verification still displayed a citation warning. Nemotron develops the distinction between a claim concerning separate property and division of co-owned property in greater detail, adds Article 90 as contextual rather than dispositive material, and explicitly notes an inconsistency in one case summary. No guardrail warning is included in the supplied Nemotron output.

2. BGE-M3 DeepSeek vs Gemini

This comparison concerns two answer-generation configurations that use the same BGE-M3 embedding model: the baseline generated with DeepSeek and the multi-agent answer generated with Gemini. Because document embedding is held constant, the comparison focuses primarily on differences in generation, synthesis, citation use, and response structure rather than on the vector representation of the documents.

Gemini is shorter and presents the material as direct triggers and practical remedies. The BGE-M3 DeepSeek answer is more cautious about the absence of an express statutory mechanism and provides a fuller limitation section. DeepSeek triggered the guardrail once, resulting in one corrective rewrite, and the subsequent verification still displayed a citation warning. Gemini also underwent one corrective cycle, after which its second verification pass reported unresolved multi-source citation labels. A guardrail warning indicates that the cited claims require source review; it is not, by itself, an accuracy score.

Judicial Separation of Assets in Slovenia: Triggers and What a Court Can Order

1. What the retrieved materials do and do not establish

The documents retrieved for Slovenia do not set out a statutory procedure or set of triggers specifically labelled "judicial separation of assets." None of the case summaries or legislative extracts reproduces or explains provisions that establish such a mechanism as a distinct request. Accordingly, the precise legal triggers for a request for judicial separation of assets cannot be stated from this context.

What the materials do establish is the surrounding framework: the default marital property regime, the treatment of separate property, and the court's role in resolving property disputes between spouses. These are set out below, followed by what courts have practically ordered in real disputes.

2. The default regime and the concept of separate property

- A legal marital property regime applies unless the spouses agree otherwise through an agreement on property relationships. [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 65]

- Separate property is defined as property acquired before marriage or received without consideration during marriage, plus items of small value intended for exclusively personal use. [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 77]
- A spouse exercises their property right over their separate property autonomously. [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 78]

3. Court involvement in property disputes between spouses

The materials identify two situations in which a court becomes involved in property matters:

- Investment in the other spouse's separate immovable property: If a spouse invests in immovable property that is the other spouse's separate property, and there is no agreement on the existence and amount of their claim and its insurance, the spouse may request that a court decide on the existence and amount of that claim and its insurance, in accordance with property law and the provisions of the Act regulating enforcement and insurance. [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 79]
- Failure to agree on division: If spouses cannot agree on the division of property, a court shall divide the property in accordance with the rules applying to the division of co-owned property. [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 75]

4. What courts have practically ordered in real disputes

The case summaries show how Slovenian courts handled property division in practice:

- Ljubljana case (9 July 2018 – 4 December 2021): The court divided assets valued at approximately EUR 100,000 (real estate, a garage, business premises and bank funds) in shares of 45% to the plaintiff and 55% to the defendant, ordered the defendant to provide documents authorising registration of the plaintiff's share in the immovable property (garage and land), and ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff EUR 4,713.54, with each party bearing their own costs. The court considered the income and contributions of each spouse. [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I]
- Supreme Court decision of 5 September 2019: The division of assets (real estate, bank funds and shares in companies) was confirmed at 50% for each party; the defendant's appeal was upheld at second instance, the revision was dismissed, and the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the review proceeding. [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 211/2018, 5. 9. 2019]
- Case lasting 6 months and 4 days: Assets valued at EUR 200,000 (real estate, apartments, business spaces and a boat) were divided between the ex-spouses, with different shares to each; the decision was based on the Civil Procedure Act and the settlement details are confidential. [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1301/2012-II]
- Ljubljana district court judgment of 22 August 2022: The court found that an apartment acquired during the marriage was co-owned property, that the defendant had failed to prove otherwise, and awarded the plaintiff half of the property; the defendant was ordered to pay the plaintiff's legal costs of EUR 3,483.87. The decision applied Family Code sections 67 and 73. [Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II]
- Supreme Court decision of 21 June 2018: The court dealt with ownership of an apartment and several real estate properties, declaring the applicant owner of 15% and the defendant of 45%, ordering the defendant to pay a specified amount with default interest, dismissing an application for a declaration of common property, and ordering the applicant to reimburse the defendant's costs of EUR 4,462.76; the revision was dismissed. [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018]

5. Practical takeaway

From the materials, Slovenian courts in divorce disputes:

- determine the shares of co-owned marital property (commonly 50/50, but also 45/55 where contributions differed);
- order registration of a party's share in immovable property;
- order monetary compensation and cost payments.

[Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I] [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 211/2018, 5. 9. 2019]

6. Limitation

The specific question of when a spouse may request judicial separation of assets and the legal triggers for such a request are not addressed in any of the provided documents. The materials describe separate property, court resolution of specific claims (e.g., investment claims under [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 79] and division of co-owned property under [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 75]), and the default marital property regime under [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 65], but they do not establish a "judicial separation of assets" mechanism as such. To answer that question directly, the relevant statutory provisions governing judicial separation of assets would need to be supplied.

Appendix B - Nemotron Multi-Agent Answer

The following response is reproduced verbatim. Only its visual layout has been changed.

On the retrieved material, there is no free-standing statutory right for a Slovenian spouse to petition for a "judicial separation of assets" on grounds such as endangerment of marital property, dissipation, or loss of trust. No such trigger appears in the legislation retrieved, and no case-law document describes such a remedy.

What the material does show are two concrete judicial routes by which a spouse can obtain a court decision about property, plus a body of case law showing how courts divide spouses' common property in practice.

(a) Investment in the other spouse's separate immovable property — [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 79]

This is the clearest "trigger" in the material. Where one spouse invests in immovable property that is the separate property of the other spouse:

- the spouses may agree on the existence and amount of the investing spouse's claim against the other's separate property and on its insurance;
- if there is no agreement, the investing spouse may request that a court decide the existence and amount of that claim and its insurance, in accordance with property law and the provisions of the Act regulating enforcement and insurance.

The trigger is therefore a three-element fact pattern: (i) an investment by one spouse, (ii) into immovable property belonging to the other spouse as separate property, and (iii) the absence of an agreement on the claim. The court's order is confined to the existence, amount and insurance of the claim — it is not a wholesale reallocation of the spouses' assets.

The background rules explain why this route exists:

- [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 77] — separate property is property acquired before marriage or received without consideration during marriage; items of small value intended exclusively for personal use are separate property regardless of how acquired.
- [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 78] — a spouse exercises their property right over separate-property items autonomously (applying mutatis mutandis to their other separate property). Because the owner manages separate property autonomously, the investing spouse's recourse, absent agreement, is a claim decided by a court, not an automatic entitlement to the asset itself.

(b) Division where there is no agreement on dividing co-owned property — [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 75]

- Once the shares of co-owned property are established, the spouses may agree on the manner of division; an agreement to hold the items as co-owners in proportion to their shares also counts as division.
- If there is no agreement on division, a court shall divide the property in accordance with the rules applying to the division of co-owned property.

This is framed as division of co-owned property after shares are established, not as an interim separation of assets during an ongoing marriage.

(c) Marital property agreements register — [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 90]

The register of marital property agreements is maintained electronically by the Chamber of Notaries of Slovenia, with notarial duties to request entry of agreements, amendments and terminations within set deadlines. This concerns how such agreements are recorded; it does not itself confer a right to judicial separation of assets.

(d) A timing note from the case law — [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I]

The only trigger-like statement in the case-law set is that the court "allowed the addressing of property issues during ongoing litigation under specific circumstances." The document does not specify what those circumstances are.

(e) Substantive basis actually applied — [Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II]

That decision records reliance on Family Code sections 67 and 73, treating an apartment acquired during the marriage as co-owned property because the defendant failed to prove otherwise, and considering the "contributions of each spouse" when awarding the plaintiff half.

[Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018] likewise states that co-owned property includes assets acquired during the marriage and that the remaining value is divided in the event of a divorce; its metadata lists Articles 58, 59, 60 and 184 as the provisions used.

The most concrete example is [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I] (Ljubljana, judgment of 4 December 2021), where the court:

- determined the shares in the co-owned property as 45% to the plaintiff and 55% to the defendant;
- ordered the defendant to provide documents authorising registration of the plaintiff's share in the immovable property (a garage and land);
- ordered the defendant to pay the plaintiff EUR 4,713.54; and
- ordered that each party bear its own costs, applying the Civil Procedure Act to the costs of the proceedings.

Other outcomes in the set:

- [Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II] (Ljubljana, 22 August 2022): the apartment was held to belong to the plaintiff as co-owned property, the plaintiff was awarded half of it, and the defendant was ordered to pay the plaintiff's legal costs. (The summary is internally inconsistent — it also says it is "not specified who will bear these costs" — so the cost outcome should be treated cautiously.)
- [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018] (Supreme Court): a 50/50 division of an apartment; the revision was dismissed and the plaintiff was ordered to reimburse the defendant's costs of EUR 4,462.76.
- [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 211/2018, 5. 9. 2019] (Supreme Court): a 50% division of assets for each party (real estate, bank funds and company shares); the revision was dismissed and the defendant was ordered to pay the costs of the review proceeding.
- [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1301/2012-II]: division of assets valued at EUR 200,000 (real estate, apartments, business premises and a boat), with the parties responsible for sharing the costs; the settlement details are described as confidential.

So in practical terms, the orders courts make are: declaration of shares, orders to cooperate with registration of title, equalisation payments, and costs awards — not an interim freezing or sequestration-style "separation" of assets.

- The retrieved case-law documents are all judicial decisions (first-instance and Supreme Court); none is a statute. Where they refer to the Family Code or the Civil Procedure Act, that is the courts' own description of the law applied, not the statutory text.
- The retrieved legislative provisions do not articulate a test or list of triggers for requesting "judicial separation of assets" as a distinct remedy — no grounds such as dissipation or endangerment of marital property appear. I cannot supply those from this material.
- The case-law set does not explain what the "specific circumstances" in [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I] were, so the precise conditions for raising property issues during ongoing litigation remain unspecified in the material.

Conclusion (Slovenia only): on the supplied material the supported routes to a judicial property decision are (i) the Art. 79 investment-claim scenario — investment by one spouse in the other's separate immovable property, with no agreement — leading to a decision on the existence, amount and insurance of the claim; and (ii) the Art. 75 no-agreement division scenario, where the court divides co-owned property by the general co-ownership rules. In practice courts declare shares, order title-registration cooperation, award equalisation sums and decide costs, as illustrated by [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I], [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018] and the other decisions above. A broader, general "judicial separation of assets" remedy is not established by the retrieved material.

In Slovenia, a spouse can request judicial intervention concerning assets under specific legal contexts, primarily in relation to the division of co-owned property or when handling investments made into separate property [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 75, Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 79].

Legal Triggers and Contexts

- Division of Co-owned Property: Co-owned property generally encompasses assets acquired during the marriage [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018]. The primary trigger for judicial division occurs in the event of a divorce [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018] or when spouses fail to reach an agreement on how to divide their property after their respective shares have been established [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 75]. Property issues can also be addressed during ongoing litigation under specific circumstances [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I].
- Investments in Separate Property: If a spouse invests in immovable property that constitutes the separate property of the other spouse, and the couple lacks an agreement concerning the existence and amount of the resulting claim, a spouse may request that the court decide on the existence and amount of their claim and its insurance in accordance with property law and the provisions of the Act regulating enforcement and insurance [Slovenia | Divorce | Art. 79].

When determining asset divisions, the court evaluates statutory frameworks—such as the Marriage and Family Relations Act and the Family Code (specifically sections 67 and 73) [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I, Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II]—alongside the income and contributions of each spouse [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I, Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II].

Practical Court Orders in Real Disputes

In actual property disputes, Slovenian courts have practically ordered a range of remedies, including:

- Determining Ownership Shares: Setting specific percentage shares for each party, such as a 50/50 split [Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 211/2018, 5. 9. 2019, Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II, Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018], or uneven shares like 45% for the plaintiff and 55% for the defendant [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I].
- Declaratory Relief: Formally declaring apartments or other real estate to be co-owned property [Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II].
- Administrative and Registration Compliance: Ordering a party to supply necessary documentation authorizing the registration of property shares for immovable property, garages, and land [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I].

- Financial Adjustments: Mandating monetary payments, financial compensation, and the reimbursement of costs or proceedings expenses between the parties [Slovenia | Divorce | P 1431/2018 – I, Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 211/2018, 5. 9. 2019, Slovenia | Divorce | P 254/2021 - II, Slovenia | Divorce | Sodba Vrhovnega sodišča RS II Ips 296/2016, 21. 6. 2018].
